SCREEN

PETER PORKCHOPS

The comic strip is divided into two panels. In the first panel, Wile E. Coyote is on the ground, looking up at a green door with a window. Inside the window, Porky Pig is visible. In the second panel, Porky Pig is standing in the doorway, looking surprised. Wile E. Coyote is on the right, looking angry and shouting, with a red starburst indicating a crash or explosion. The background shows a cityscape with yellow buildings and a blue sky.

WHY THE SWIFT LIVES IN CHIMNEYS

SAMMY SQUIRREL poked his head out of his hole in the tree-trunk. Instantly, he pulled it in again, for something whizzed by him at terrific speed. Up on the branch above, Roscoe Raccoon ducked as the thing whooshed by.

"Ha-ha," laughed Pat Parrot from his perch on the tree. "Afraid of a little bird. Shame on you both!"

"Was that a bird?" asked Sammy. "I thought it was a rocket or a jet airplane."

"Sounded like it was going a thousand miles an hour," said Roscoe.

"It was flying only two hundred miles an hour," said Pat Parrot. "That was a Chimney Swift."

"What's his hurry?" asked Sammy.

Before Pat could answer, there was another whoosh, as the Swift returned full speed. Even Pat ducked this time, in spite of himself.

"Come back here!" yelled Pat, but the bird was a mile away already, and didn't hear him.

"Oh, well," said Pat, "those Chimney Swifts are always in a hurry—always anxious to get back to the chimney where they live."

Pat started to curl up for a nap, but he knew very well that Roscoe and Sammy would not let him. So he was not surprised when Roscoe asked:

"Why does the Chimney Swift live in a chimney?"

"Well," began Pat Parrot, "for the answer to that question we must go back trillions of years, to the great-great-ancestor of that Swift who just whizzed by.

"His name was Simon Swift, and . . ."

"What was the name of that one who just scared the daylights out of us?" asked Sammy.

"Dunno," said Pat, "and it really doesn't matter, does it? All the Chimney Swifts today are descendants of Simon Swift, who lived so long ago, and who was the first one to live in a chimney.

"In those days, the swifts were nothing like what they are today. They were very poor flyers compared to the ones we know now, who are the speediest of birds.

"Now, everybody knows that birds go South for the winter, when it gets cold, and come back North again when the weather warms up. They do that every year, and have been doing it for millions of years, even in the time of Simon Swift.

"But in those days, the Swifts were such slow flyers, that it took them two years to make a round trip!

"Naturally, when Simon Swift was a young bird, he didn't know this until his father explained it to him one day.

"'Well, Simon,' said his father, 'we've got to get started on our way South.'

"'But,' said Simon, 'I thought you just got up here. That's what a little bird told me. Here it is only July, and you want to go South already.'

"'That's true,' replied his father, 'but, it takes us forever and a day to get down there, and by the time we get back again, two years have passed. We Swifts are very slow flyers.'

"'Why bother to go at all?' demanded Simon.

"'We'd freeze to death, or starve, up here in the cold,' explained his father.

"'But Simon was very stubborn, and decided that he'd wait a few months longer.

"'Have it your way,' said his father. 'You're nearly full grown, and you don't have to obey me anymore. But I'm going South right now.'

"And so his father left, while Simon stayed on, enjoying the summer and early fall. Then one night, there was a heavy frost. All the bugs disappeared, and there was nothing to eat. Simon saw all the other birds going South, and decided he'd better start, too.

A couple of weeks later, Simon was the only bird around for a thousand miles, and winter had caught up with him all of a sudden. He was forced to leave, and tried to fly faster and farther each day.

"Soon he was flying twelve hours a day, but was still making very little progress. And one evening, dead tired, he just dropped out of the sky, and landed, kerplunk, on the roof-top of a house. Sticking out of the house was a square pile of bricks. Simon crawled over to it, hoping to find shelter from the wind. To his surprise, the bricks were warm. It was a chimney.

"Simon nestled up to it, and dropped off to sleep. A short while later, he woke up in the dark, shivering. The chimney had cooled off, and he was just as bad off as before.

"Suddenly, he heard a voice—the voice of a man!

"'Oh, dear. I'm stuck,' wailed the voice. 'Whatever will I do now? And I'm so far behind as it is.'

"As cold, hungry, and tired as he was, Simon hopped up on the edge of the chimney and looked down. Inside the chimney was a fat man in a red suit, and he had a big bag with him.

"'Can I do anything?' asked Simon.

"'I should say so,' said the man. 'I'm Santa Claus, and I'm stuck in this chimney. Perhaps you can help me lighten my bag, so I can get out of here. But do hurry!'

"'But I'm only a Swift,' said Simon, 'and a terrible slowpoke. Besides, I'm hungry!'

"'Well,' said Santa Claus, 'eat some of this food in the bag. Then deliver the rest, while I try to get out.'

"Simon hopped down, found some delicious nuts and fruits, ate his fill, and then started delivering presents to other houses nearby. Santa told him to fly down the chimneys, and drop them into the stockings he would find at the bottom.

"Well, with the wonderful food he had eaten, and with Santa coaxing him and pleading with him to hurry, Simon soon found himself flying a hundred times faster than he ever had before. It must have been magic food," finished Pat Parrot.

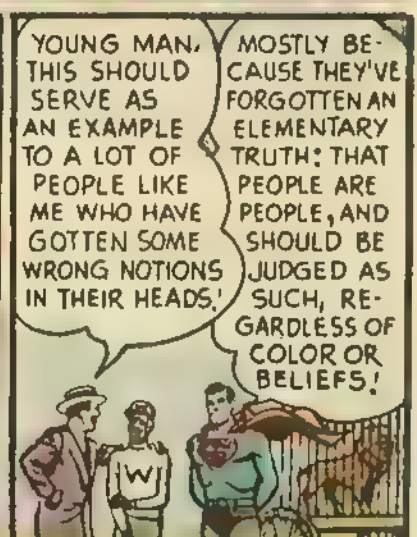

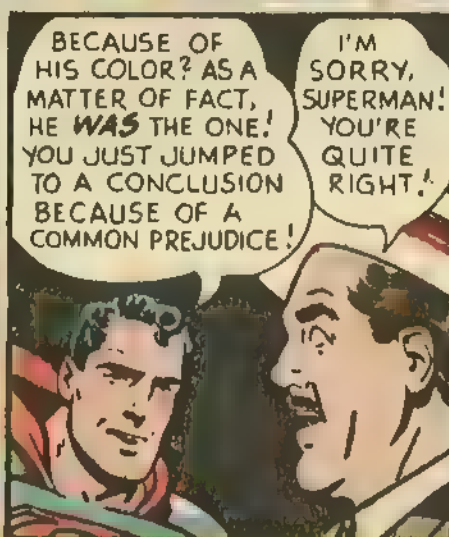

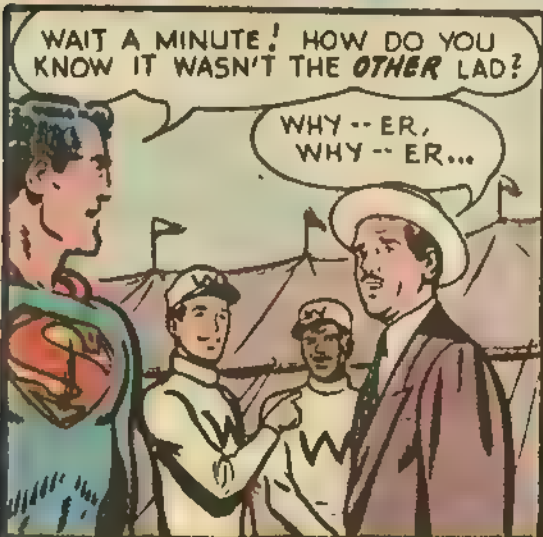

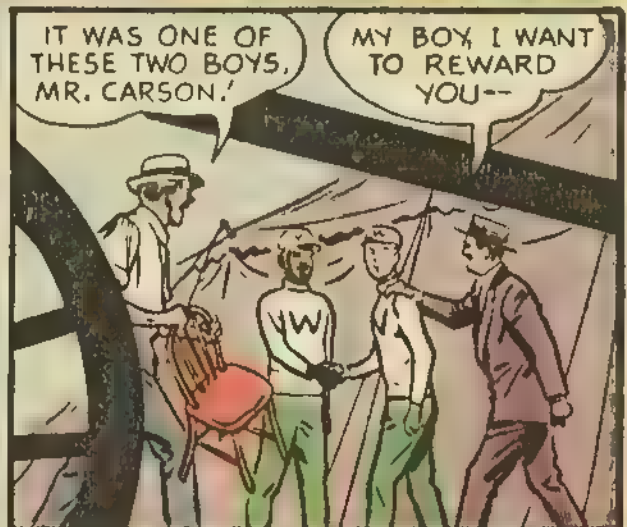

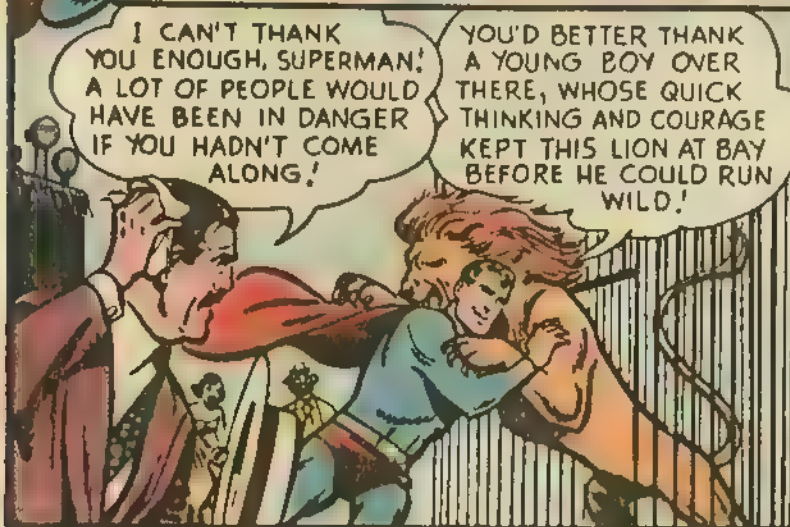

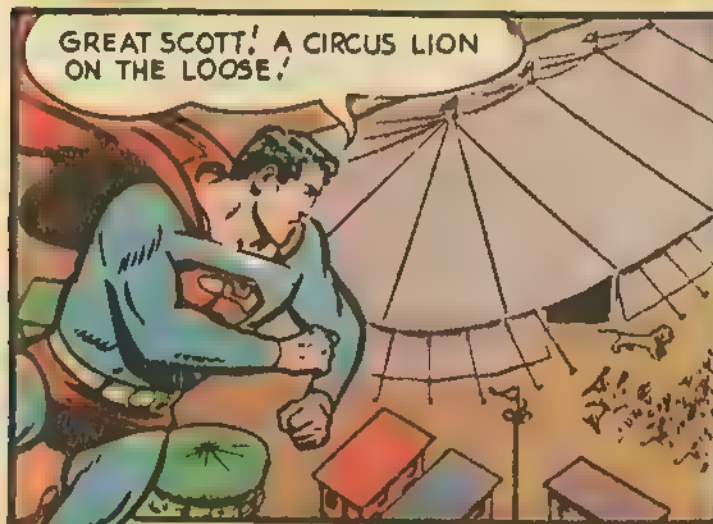

"But," said Sammy Squirrel, "you didn't tell us yet why Swifts live in chimneys."

"Well," said Pat, "ever since then, Swifts have been trying to meet that nice old man again. But you see, they fly so fast nowadays that they make a round trip from the South every year, like all other birds. So they're never up North in the winter when Santa comes. But they keep hoping they'll see him again, and that's why they live in chimneys!"
